
Oil Search employees donate blood

Media Release

Thursday, 3 March 2016

Compassion drove Keron Kilip and Noel Tomdia, both employees of Oil Search, to donate blood in the ongoing Port Moresby General Hospital Corporate Blood Drive in Port Moresby this week.

“I imagined myself lying in hospital in need of blood and there wasn’t a single bag available,” said Ms Kilip, a first-time donor and Oil Search’s Government Affairs Advisor. “I plan on donating blood again in three months as there are associated health benefits as well.”

Noel Tomdia, a regular blood donor and an Inventory Controller at Oil Search, feels strongly that one should always take the opportunity to save a life when it presents itself. “I have made a pledge to donate blood every time I am able to.”

54 Oil Search employees volunteered to donate blood to the Port Moresby General Hospital blood bank.

Hospital staff again commended Oil Search for supporting the ongoing corporate blood drive and for allowing the mobile blood bank team to set up their facilities in the Company’s state-of-the-art medical clinic located within its new Harbourside office so employees could easily donate blood.

Another blood drive for Oil Search employees is planned for later in the year.
